Ball Ground Needed in City

Athletes Play and Fans Sit on Ground

If this isn't one good valid reason why Phoenix should have some sort of a municipal ball park, why I would like to know what is it? An old fan yesterday afternoon, waving his hand around to include the large crowd gathered to watch the Outlaws and Pastimes, two Phoenix amateur organizations attempt to play ball, on what is termed the Polk street grounds. Within his range of vision there stood, staid, squatted or otherwise inclined all of 500 ardent fans, fans who have the hot mid-afternoon sun to watch a game of ball. The old fan stated, it was a mean shame, that people like that who enjoyed baseball could not have any better place provided in which to enjoy the great national game, than a corner lot with no grand stand, no back stop, and with an amount of shade so small as to almost be called negligible. The question of a ball park has been argued pro and con between the ball fans for some years in Phoenix. The Polk street location is almost ideal. It is but a few minutes' walk from town, good flat ground, but there is where the argument in favor of it ends. It has nothing else to commend it. Sunday after Sunday, a large crowd

NIGHTY OUTLAWS AT LAST ARE HUMBED; PASTIMES DO TRICK

In what might be called a synoptized error and swatting the muchvaunted Outlaws, heretofore lords of all they surveyed, were forced yesterday afternoon to bow their heads in the humiliation of defeat. The outfit which turned the trick was the Past-times, a medley of players composed of the scorings of the other amateur teams of the city. The score was 17 to 3.

The Pastimes and Outlaws—note that the Pastimes come first this time —played last Sunday. At that time the youngsters were forced to pass the palm of victory to their elder brethren, the Outlaws. Yesterday they were loaded for bear, and confident that if Garrison could last there would be but one answer to the question. He did last; he did better than that, he moved down the Outlaws, one after another, and when he did allow them to hit their efforts amounted to practically nothing.

A good deal of credit should be given to Cooper, who did the honors of the occasion behind the bat. Honors and Garrison made a whole team in fact, with Cooper holding Garrison down, and pulling him through the tough places, it looked like a million-dollar combination.

The crowd, too, was with the Past-times. They had seen the Outlaws ramble all over the anatomy of team after team, and the underdog sentiment pervaded the gathering. Seemingly the heat had gone to the Outlaws' heads. Time after time they had a chance to cut off the youngsters, but just as often a poor stop at or no stop at all, proved the holdback.
They simply couldn't hang on to them.
If all the errors were counted up against the Outlaws that were really made, they would make a list as long as the moral law. Fortunately, the score-keeper was lenient, and accredited them with only twelve.
